

HOLLOW MEN

This song came to be through an English assignment I received while I was in London. It was my last year of school and I was away for most of it, but received all the assignments. The assignment was to read T.S. Eliot's "Hollow Men" and then to respond through any form of art. I read it over a few times and created this song. I just followed my intuition and wrote whatever the feeling/image was that came to me after reading. I imagined myself in a dark battle, where people were being blown up and blowing others up. The depth of darkness - confusion and emptiness. - My experience coming to terms with death and remembering the Love I left back home. Focusing on saving the love within me and rejoicing through the next.
